

Italian Association for the History of Economic Thought (AISPE) Code of Conduct

AISPE promotes high standards of conduct throughout the profession, as well as the participation and advancement in the history of economics profession of individuals from all backgrounds.

AISPE members are expected to conduct themselves consistently with the values of honesty, fairness, responsibility, transparency, and integrity.

AISPE members should encourage the free expression and exchange of ideas, topics, opinions, theories, and methods through debate, discussion, and all forms of participation. Each scholar at every level should be treated fairly, with civility and respect.

The AISPE community should ensure full participation and expression for all, so that equal opportunity and fair treatment apply regardless of characteristics such as age, gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity, nationality, disability, political or religious views, personal or social status, affiliations, or relationships.

AISPE members are encouraged to report any breach of the code to the designated person of confidence.